CONFERENCE HANDBOOK

TABLE OF CONTENTS

SECRETARY GENERAL'S ADDRESS

Honourable Future Delegates, Esteemed Colleagues, Dear Friends,

As this year's Secretary General, it is my honour and pleasure to welcome you to the Fourth Edition of BITSMUN, the Model United Nations hosted by BITS Pilani, Hyderabad Campus and organized by the BITSMUN Society. I will have the privilege to be your humble host this October 2015 in the wonderful city of Hyderabad, the Pearl of the south. This year's Conference is full of surprises and its contents will allow you, as a representative of a foreign government, to explore new themes and issues, face new challenges and meet new people from many and varied regions. If you are an experienced MUNer or if it's the first time you enter an intellectually thrilling simulation of this sort, BITSMUN can provide you with the right mix of challenge and guidance. You can call this conference the perfect starting point for what can become your very own MUN adventure.

In the past editions, delegates from varied regions across India and abroad have participated, and we aim to improve the participation, thanks to our new partnerships and networks with other MUNs as well as other associations, so that you may experience a lively multicultural environment at work to address worldwide issues. In conclusion, we are waiting for you, young leaders of the future, to come and find new, intriguing, innovative and creative solutions to old problems.

This year's Conference would help practice skills and acquire knowledge that without fail would help you in the career you pursue. Working for an NGO, a government, a think-tank, or any international organization, what you experience during this MUN conference will aid you in a variety of situations.

However, I hope BITSMUN 2015 can be an occasion to reflect on the role of leadership and how this can influence a community. So, if you think you can shed some light on the issues and you feel excited to debate intensively during the conference, enjoy fruitful conversations, experience the multiplicity of views on current international disputes, BITSMUN is the perfect conference to attend this year. Put on your diplomatic attire, choose a country that you would like to represent and prepare for the ever-inspiring and rewarding talks.

I, and the OC of BITSMUN'15, once again welcome you to these three days of quality debate, stimulating challenges, new experiences and undoubtedly, loads of fun.

Ayan Bharadwaj

Secretary General – BITSMUN'15.

GENERAL INFORMATION

VENUE

It is understood that the venue of the conference is the campus of BITS Pilani, Hyderabad Campus, Shamirpet. The venue of accommodation will be informed to the participants through email/updates on our social media and on the website.

REGISTRATION

Delegates and Press members who have opted and paid for accommodation will have to report at the hotel on the 8th of October. Registration desks will be put up from 3:00pm onwards. Transportation from the venue of accommodation to the campus, and back, will be provided by us. However, this facility is only for those participants who have paid for accommodation. The other participants will have to commute to the campus on their own. Given the distance of the campus from the city, we strongly advise the participants to start well in advance. Being more than 30 minutes late to the committee session will be considered as absence.

Registration for the participants who are not availing accommodation commences at 7:30am on the 9th of September. Registration closes at 9:30am. Delegates are expected to be at the venue latest by 9:00am.

The following documents are MANDATORY:

1. Ticket/Transaction mail from Explara stating that the payment has been made.

2. Valid photo ID proof – Driver's License, Aadhar Card, PAN Card etc. (Hint: If the government of India accepts it, we do.)

UNIC

This conference is in partnership with the United Nations Information Centre for India and Bhutan and accordingly, UN4MUN Rules of Procedure will be followed. The Rules of Procedure have been attached. The delegates are expected to be thorough with the way in which a committee proceeds in order to ensure smooth flow of discussion and debate. However, all the rules are subject to the discretion of the Executive Board. Additionally, a guide for attendees provided by the UNIC has also been attached.

RULES

RULES OF THE INSTITUTION

No individual is allowed to enter the premises of BITS Pilani, Hyderabad Campus in an inebriated state. The possession and/or consumption of alcohol, tobacco, and any other banned substances is not allowed inside the premises of BPHC, and any individual caught possessing and/or consuming the same will be immediately disbarred from competing in the MUN, and expelled from the campus.

The possession of weapons is not allowed.

Students are not allowed to drive any motor vehicle inside campus.

The whole committee will be held responsible for any breakage of any equipment in the lecture rooms inside campus, including but not limited to, tables, chairs, and audio equipment.

Entering the terrace is prohibited.

On an informal note, our campus doesn't take too many things seriously, you can pretty much be free around the campus; the only things you aren't allowed to do are smoke, drink, or anything else common sense would suggest to be illegal within an educational institution.

RULES OF THE HOTEL

ALL participants will adhere to any and all rules set by the management of the hotel in which they are accommodated. Any individual not complying with the rules will be immediately disbarred from competing in the conference.

DRESS CODE

The dress code for gentlemen is western formals: formal shirt, formal trousers, a tie, dress shoes, and a blazer. The dress code for ladies is western formals as well: Ladies must wear dresses, skirts or slacks. Blouses and sweaters, if worn, must be appropriate to the august nature of the gathering. While there is no such thing as a 'permitted skirt length', the secretariat requests the delegates to be judicious.

For both gentlemen and ladies, professionalism is key, and delegates have to note that an MUN is a very formal gathering. Casual clothing such as jeans, T-shirts, shorts, sandals, and so on, is not encouraged. Delegates are permitted to wear the traditional clothing of the country they represent.

AUTHORITY OF THE SECRETARIAT

Participants are requested to note that the Secretariat's word is final and binding on any matters regarding the rules. The rules, regulations, councils, agendas, and executive board members mentioned in this document may be subject to change with or without prior notice and the secretariat's word is final on such matters. Delegates having any issues with the rules of procedure, or a ruling by the Executive Board, are requested to approach the Executive Board with the issue, and if the EB fails to provide a satisfactory response, delegates may approach the Secretary General, and appropriate action will be taken. The Secretariat has the right to expel any participant from the college premises if found breaking rules, including but not limited to the ones mentioned previously.

INTERNATIONAL PRESS CORPS

The International Press is authorized to publish any material that comes under the scope of this conference. The members of the International Press are free to observe the proceedings of the committees as long as their presence doesn't cause any significant disruption to the proceedings of the committee.

Note: Despite putting in the best of our efforts into organizing this conference, there might be scope for a few shortcomings. The participants are expected to keep calm and resolve any issues with the OC peacefully. Any form of violence – verbal/mental/physical – directed towards the members of the OC or any other participant will result in strict action, with the minimum punishment of expulsion from the conference.

Research

Research is possibly the most intimidating yet most important part of preparing for any Model United Nations conference. Without proper preparation, not only are representatives unable to accurately represent their country's position in a global scenario but they also restrict themselves from gaining the most out of the memorable MUN learning experience.

A delegate's aim at a MUN conference is to most faithfully represent their country's stand on a certain issue being debated, and to do this, thorough research is needed. It goes beyond retelling speeches of national leaders and requires a genuine understanding of national policy, as only this can provide the basic foundation of role-playing at the MUN.

Here you will learn methods and tips for researching, understanding your country's perspective and policies and writing your position paper using critical information.

The Three Levels of Research:

For any Model United Nations conference, your research should focus on a top-down approach on three levels which goes from the general to the specific, although the areas will naturally overlap on several occasions. The idea is to research each area thoroughly in order to develop a proper understanding of your country and the issues that will be discussed.

The three levels are:
1) The UN System;
2) Country Information and;
3) The Assigned Agenda.

1. The United Nations System

It is interesting that this is an area which is often overlooked when researching for a MUN conference. MUNs aim to recreate the United Nations and so it is absolutely imperative that to do so, you know what the UN is, what it does and how it functions. Successful and proactive participation in the simulation requires a level of understanding of the United Nations organization itself, regarding structures, functions and protocols. The more conferences you attend, the less time you will find yourself spending on this aspect, since the only new research required is if you are going to a committee you've never been in before.

It is important for delegates to familiarise themselves with:
- The United Nations Charter: http://www.un.org/en/documents/charter/
- The history of the United Nations.
- The main bodies and committees of the UN: http://www.un.org/en/aboutun/structure/index.shtml
- The functioning of the various bodies and committees, particularly your own.
- The Universal Declaration of Human Rights: http://www.un.org/en/documents/udhr/
- The current Secretary-General and what he or she advocates: http://www.un.org/sg/

UN Information Centre
for India and Bhutan

- Your country's history within the UN, its role and reputation. Information on this can be found on the websites of the permanent mission of the UN to your country.
- Recent UN actions pertaining to your country or the agenda – including statements, press releases, publications, resolutions etc.: http://www.un.org/en/documents/index.shtml or http://research.un.org/en/docs/

Although there are countless publications and documents on the United Nations, the best source to studying about the United Nations is the UN itself. Below are a further collection of useful links:

- http://www.un.org/en/members/index.shtml
- www.un.org/Pubs/chronicle/online.html
- http://www.icj-cij.org/
- http://treaties.un.org/Home.aspx

2. Country Information

Build a knowledge base of your country - delegates must be aware of their assigned country's historical, geographical, political, economic, social and environmental aspects. Build a country profile on your government – what systems, ideologies, political parties and leaders represent your country? What is your country's foreign policy and how is this affected by important historical and domestic aspects? Who are your allies and your adversaries? What other bilateral, regional and international organizations is your country a part of?

After building a basic profile, you must study your country's broad stand on global issues, particularly at the UN. Develop a basic understanding of your country's voting pattern, its involvement in the UN – speeches given by leaders and delegates of your country at the UN and resolutions/treaties it has been a part of.

You may also wish to visit the national embassy of your country as it is the best source of information and research for sources that are not as readily available. It is the best way to get first-hand information on your country and where it stands on various issues. It could also give you the opportunity to interact with a real diplomat from the country you're representing, and pick up tips on how they carry themselves and respond to questions.

3. The Assigned Agenda

This will form the bulk of your research – it will be what is used directly in committee sessions. You will be informed of the agenda of issues to be discussed at the MUN by your organisers before the conference. A thorough study of the tabled topic for debate and discussion with respect to your country, UN and the world as a whole will aid you to properly represent your country and actively participate in the simulation. You will be provided a study guide for your assigned agenda by your MUN committee, which you should use as your starting point.

Within your agenda topic, the three areas that must be covered are:
a) A background and overview of the agenda topic and your country's policy on it
b) Detailed information on important aspects of the topic
c) Broad information on where other main countries and blocs stand

a. Background

After the background guide, news articles relating to your topic can be a good place to find a brief overview of the most recent developments. While only verified news agencies such as Reuters and Al-Jazeera are accepted in committee, news and op-ed articles can provide an entry point into deeper issues. However, you must be careful to look for writers' biases on the Internet in particular.

The next step is to look for resolutions and treaties that are relevant to the topic – the most recent resolution from the UN Documentation Centre should refer to the documents most central to your agenda. You must then look into your country's voting history on the matter, for indications on action, inaction, presence and absence, looking for changing policies and exploring their causal factors. Statements explaining votes can be found in records on the UN website.

b. Details

Once your background research is done, you need to dive deep into the topic to understand the primary aspects, and try to logically 'frame' the agenda into main sub-headings of sorts, under which all the important points can be organized. This can help you break down complex agendas into neatly manageable chunks, and score brownie points if your frame is accepted by the committee. It's important to make a clear distinction between facts, arguments based on those facts and opinions, particularly when reading on the Internet.

At this stage, sometimes as you're framing the problems, you're also coming up with innovative solutions to put in the proposal. Looking up implementation of past resolutions is a helpful starting point, but op-eds, blog posts, local and international NGO reports, think tank papers and academic papers will likely be more useful in shaping your ideas. Remember to focus on solutions that are politically, economically and sustainably feasible.

c. Other Arguments

One of the most important lessons from MUNs is learning to accommodate difference – it is important to be aware of the arguments and facts used by those holding the opposite stand to yours. While as a delegate you are bound to espouse the views of your country, individually your opinions can be shaped through the push and pull of opposing ideas. Also, this research will help you logically counter the arguments put forth by radically opposed delegations, and bring the committee around to your point of view.

In some conferences, delegates research countries other than their own in order to surprise other delegates with allegations and throw them on the back foot. Needless to say, this is not only undiplomatic but also entirely counter-productive to the cooperative purpose of the conference. While it is important to be aware of the policies of other countries, antagonistic behaviour can only harm the atmosphere of the committee and hamper consensus-building, and thus is discouraged.

The most important part of research is being able to synthesize the data you've found in an organized way and identify the key pieces of information, including facts and figures, which you can use to illustrate and defend your position. If your country plays a central role in the agenda topic, it becomes all the more important to be able to explain your actions. Finally, all your research comes down to being able to justify your position, explain your ideas and convince the other delegates that these are the most valuable approaches to solving the problem.

Step Two: Write a Position Paper

Public speaking, debating and verbal communication is essential to MUNs, but it is hard to do this without having your thoughts and information well organised beforehand. A position paper is a clear and concise one-page document specifying the background and stand of your country regarding the topic. Position papers are not only a great way to prepare speeches for the Speaker's List, but also allows delegates to become familiar with their foreign policy and their country's position on important issues which they can share with the rest of the meeting.

A competent position paper is usually structured as follows:
- Introduction: A general sentence clearly stating the country's position, and why it considers the issue important.
- Body: Paragraph 1: Address the issue from a national, and then international context. Is the issue significant on a national level in your country? If yes, then how does your government address it or deal with it? Are there any national institutions or mechanisms such as laws on the issue, any best case practices that can be adapted elsewhere? What are your country's global contributions? Are there any reports by the SG, Special Rapporteurs, groups, conferences or treaties relating to your country and agenda? Using quotes from statements made by important country officials can strengthen your policy statement.
- Body: Paragraph 2: This is the most important section – what kind of action would your country propose at the international level? What are the ideas and solutions you want to see in a resolution the committee passes? You can use this section to draw the attention of the Bureau to the quality of your research and innovation in proposing new feasible solutions, and in that sense this can become the first draft of a resolution or proposal for the committee.
- Conclusion: Restate your country's position on the topic.

Here are some simple tips for writing a good position paper:

DOs	DON'Ts
- Keep it simple – communicate your point strongly and effectively, avoid superfluous and confusing wording and stick to being clear and concise. - Make it look official, use a professional font and formal. You may even use the seal of your country or create an official letterhead for your position paper. The more realistic it looks, the more others want to read it. - Provide evidence for the points you make: statements from state representatives, reports, national statistics, resolutions etc. - Cite your sources – Use footnotes or endnotes to show where you found your facts and statistics.	- Do not use "I" or any other personal pronouns – remember the position paper is to represent your country's stand, not your own. - Provide a flood of information that is not related to your issue. - Support actions that are not in accordance with your country's position, even if you agree with it personally.

Speaking at a Conference

An international conference is primarily an exercise in communication. Public speaking is considered to be one of the most daunting tasks of an MUN, but delegates must realise that it is the only way to communicate your country's views and ideas at an MUN. Those who appreciate the true magnitude of the challenge understand that they need to pay attention to components of oral communication and strive to continually improve their performance. With a little understanding and practice of the skill of public speaking, particularly in the context of an MUN however, the task is much less daunting.

It is important to remember that formal debate involves a particular way of speaking with various components.

Forms of Address

A delegate's use of the 'correct' forms of address is the most elementary way to show respect for the conference and the other delegates and therefore, is imperative.
-   Addressing the Chair: Naturally, it is important to address the Chair with his/her correct title. As the Chairman has 'given' you the floor to speak, speeches usually start by thanking the Chairman: "Thank you (Mr or Madam) Chairman (for giving me the floor)." Thereafter, the word(s) '(Mr or Madam) Chairman' can be sprinkled throughout a statement, to signify paragraphs or to emphasize particular points.
-   Addressing other delegates: In formal debate, you speak of others only in third person. Therefore, in formal debates the tradition is to refer to others exclusively as 'the Distinguished Representative(s) of [name of country]'. To omit the word 'distinguished' would be a significant faux pas, and possibly a deliberate slight.

Content:

Everything you say should contribute to a particular purpose within the conference, should be premeditated, clear and organised.
-   Preparation: Everything you say must be carefully thought about and where possible and useful, be discussed with other delegates.
-   Purpose: Remember, every intervention will either advance or retard the general debate and can move the general debate in one direction or the other. Therefore, before speaking, carefully consider what purpose your speaking at a given moment will achieve. Addition, consider what you are trying to avoid or whether your words could be easily misunderstood and offend or harm your country's reputation. In certain situations, it may work more in your benefit not to say anything at all.
-   Structure: A statement is easier to understand and more effective if it is properly structured. How your arguments or ideas are introduced and developed are essential to clearly communicating your country's views. Make sure to introduce one idea at a time, starting with the widely familiar and accepted ones first. Frame proposals as contributions to a common global goal in order to encourage cooperation and conciliation among states. Be as specific and limited as possible and only refer to principles when they are universally accepted.

Engaging the audience:

In an international conference delegates often speak from a prepared text, as the case of a position paper in MUNs. However there is something very disengaging and monotonous about simply reading from a piece of paper. Hence it is important that you engage the audience during your statements and most effectively put your country's point across.

- Eye contact: Make eye contact with the audience to try and disguise the fact that your speech or statement has been prepared. If you cannot look at fellow delegates, at least make sure to make eye contact with the Chairman. This should be synchornised to add deliberate pauses and meaningful emphasis to the material you are trying to communicate.
- Speed: Inexperienced public speakers sometimes tend to speak too fast which makes much of their statement incomprehensible. You want to retain the attention of your audience – even if this means cutting out important elements and speaking slower to shorten to your statement. It is much better for the audience to understand what you have said than to get as much information across as possible, with the audience understanding only little.
- Emotion: To engage your audience, you yourself must be engaged with what you are saying. Animate your speech using your emotion, but at the same time make sure that you do not come across as angry or arrogant. You must try to build dignity and respect in order to sway the conference and to do so; you must be and sound sincere in your speeches/statements.
- Formality: The rules of procedure and conformity to the customs of the conference ensure formality. But part of this is also politeness: this consists of at all times showing respect for other delegations as individuals and for the governments, states, nations and causes they represent.

Negotiating at a Conference

Note: Please see the UN4MUN Guide for more details and descriptions of the processes and tactics referred to in this document.

Eventually, the formal and informal proceedings that take place in a conference are only meaningful if an agreement is reached. This agreement could be reached by consensus or by a majority vote. This process by which a decision is agreed upon in a conference, whether by consensus or majority vote, is known as negotiation, and it is a key skill to learn.

Negotiation is a way of coping with disagreement; it is a way of settling disputes when varying views and different objectives are present. However, there has to be a certain degree of common ground among the parties involved for the process of negotiation to work; be it the common good, the intent to resolve issues peacefully etc. Negotiation and compromise aim to end in a joint decision being made. The word 'compromise' has negative connotations in colloquial English language; to compromise your country's principles and interests would not be ideal. However, in international negotiation, 'compromise' is used to mean 'to reduce your immediate ambitions so as to accommodate the concerns of other parties to the extent needed to make them agree to an outcome that you regard as an improvement'. In light of this, delegates need not be restrained in engaging in negotiations for fear of being forced to accept another country's terms.

It is widely believed that those delegates who represent the most powerful states have the power to impose their wishes on others, but it is important to remember that military, economic or cultural power do not directly translate into coercion power. Power struggles are not the point of MUNs nor relevant to the outcomes that these struggles produce. While large, powerful countries have some distinct advantages, so do smaller countries; they are usually better placed in achieving their objectives through bilateral relations. The real source of power in MUNs is a combination of how attractive, creative and flexible your proposal is, how hardworking and clearly guided your delegation is and the bi/multilateral relationships you build with other countries during the course of the conference.

Delegates must remember to represent their country during the negotiation. Typically, on an issue that is discussed in an MUN, many delegations do not feel compelled to take a strong stand for or against any proposal. Other delegations may wish to take a particularly strong stand and emerge as 'leading delegations' for that particular issue, in accordance with their country's foreign policy, and become leaders and drivers of the negotiation process. It is more beneficial if these 'leading delegations' to work together to try and resolve an issue, consulting with other delegations at the same time. The delegations that best accommodate differing concerns are 'leading delegations', because they will be followed.

It's also helpful to remember that a failure of a committee to take a decision on the matter before them is a failure of each and every member state present – in this light, it is clear that it is in the interest of every constructive delegate to reach an agreement. This interdependence can be explained as follows: each delegate has an incentive to produce or support proposals that are attractive to as many other delegations as possible, preferably all, because that is what would give those other delegations an incentive to agree. In short, it is very much in the interest of each delegate to exert him or herself to achieve as much as possible of the objectives of other delegations (as well as his/her own objectives) to the extent that this does not do unacceptable damage to his/her own aims.

There are physical aspects such as temperature, ventilation, access to food and drink and all other factors that affect the comfort of delegates. But conferences, like crowds and individuals, have temperaments and emotions. They can be optimistic, hopeful and cooperative. They can be animated by a strong wish to reach agreement. They can have a sense of momentum carrying them in a particular direction. Negatively, they can be despairing, irritated or tired etc. Successful negotiators are aware of these factors, adapt to them and do what they can to create an atmosphere conducive to agreement.

Approaches to Negotiation

Competitive Bargaining:

This is the process when each party is concerned primarily with maximizing its own gains and minimizing its costs. Precepts of this kind can readily generate a competitive or even combative spirit and encourage negotiators to consider a loss by their counterparts as a gain for themselves. It should be evident that such sentiments at the international level are harmful to relations and thus to the prospects of cooperation and mutual tolerance. Therefore, bargaining of this kind is not encouraged at MUNs.

Tactical principles in this form of negotiation can be articulated as follows:

- Always ask for more than you expect to get. Think of some of the things asked for as 'negotiating coin' that you can trade away in order to achieve your aim. You can also assume that the other party does not expect to get everything they ask for and that some of their requests are only negotiating coin.
- You might even start off by demanding things you do not really hope to achieve, but which you know other parties strongly oppose. By such blackmail you may hope that the other parties will make concessions to you just to refrain from pressing such demands.
- Always hide your 'bottom line'. Because the other party's aim is to concede to you as little as possible, you may get more if they are not aware of how little is acceptable to you.
- Take early and give late. Negotiators often undervalue whatever is decided in the early part of the negotiation and place excessive weight on whatever is agreed towards the end of the negotiation.

- As the negotiation progresses, carefully manage the 'concession rate'. If you 'concede' things to the other party too slowly, they many lose hope of achieving a satisfactory agreement; but if you 'concede' too fast, they could end up with more than you needed to give them.
- The points at issue are seen as having the same worth for both sides –although they rarely do.

Cooperative Problem-solving:

This form of negotiation is seen as generally more productive and more appropriate in dealing with issues in the international relations. This starts from the basic recognition that both parties are interested in reaching an agreement and therefore will be willing to make proposals that will likely be agreed upon. This is the sort of bargaining that is expected both at the UN and MUNs.

To succeed in this type of negotiation, principles apply which are quite contrary to those that apply in 'competitive bargaining', namely:

- It is important not to request concessions from the other side that you know are impossible for them. If you do so, they will find it difficult to believe that you are genuinely working for an agreement.
- It is in your interest that the other party should understand your position. Indeed, perhaps they should even know your 'bottom line'. If they understand how close they are to that 'bottom line' on one point, they will also understand the necessity to include other elements that you value so as to give you an incentive to agree.
- Sometimes it is in your interest to 'give' a lot to the other side early in the negotiation process so as to give them a strong incentive to conclude the negotiation and therefore 'give' you what you need to be able to reach agreement.
- The 'concession rate' may not be important.
- There is a premium on understanding that the same points have different values for different negotiators and also on finding additional points on which to satisfy them.

As long as their intention is not to disrupt a meeting and avoid a resolution, negotiators and delegations have the common interest of reaching a resolution. Hence, negotiations are not meant to be a competitive, coercive process where the most successful delegation is that one which imposes its interests over other states, but a cooperative process that involves joint effort and a level of flexibility to accommodate the interests of other countries. Delegations that lose sight of the above mention factor are rarely productive in reaching resolutions at MUNs. The awareness of the mutual interdependence of negotiators is the fundamental basis for any successful negotiation.

Furthermore, the most persuasive argument will be that which appear reasonable from the perspective of people you are trying to convince. Therefore your whole line of argument should be developed keeping this in mind; do not speak from your own perspective but from a general outlook on how everyone can benefit.

For a successful negotiation, both time and timing are important. The successful negotiator must have a good sense of how much time a delegation will need to consult with other delegations, for ideas to be understood and for individual delegations and the conference as a whole to reach a point at which a decision can be made. The successful negotiator will also be able to judge at what moment he/she should approach another delegate, make an intervention or a proposal and so forth.

The process of negotiation:

1. Getting your ideas in the proposal:
   The conference can only agree on something that has been proposed, therefore it is essential to make sure that your wishes have been put into the proposal. If they are not reflected in the formally tabled proposal, they will not feature in the ultimate decision of the conference. There are several ways to ensure that your objectives are reflected in the tabled proposal:
   i. You can submit the proposal yourself.
   ii. You can encourage another delegation to put forth a proposal that is responsive to your interests.
   iii. You can persuade another delegation to revise its proposal to be more accommodating of your interests.
   iv. You can merge your proposal with the proposal of another delegation.
   v. You can persuade the conference to amend a proposal to reflect your objectives.
   vi. If another delegation expresses the same interests as you, support them or just let them do the work.

2. Negotiation:
   The aim of every conference is to reach a resolution through consensus. There are three possible strategies that can be used to achieve this (they can be used singularly, successively or in combinations):
   i. 'Divide' the difference – let them have what they want on some aspects of the proposal in exchange for them allowing you to have your own preferences on other points.
   ii. 'Give' to the other party –allow the other party something that they value, so that in exchange they will let you have some leverage on contested points.
   iii. Find a creative solution – an entirely creative solution that either sidesteps the difference in objectives or somehow allows for both (or all) parties to meet their respective objectives.

3. Suspension of meeting:
   When conflicts or competing views become apparent during the course of a formal meeting, the Chairman or any delegate can move for the suspension of the meeting for a brief period of time. This "pause" will:
   i. Draw the attention of all the delegations to the problem.

UN Information Centre
for India and Bhutan

    ii.   Provide time for you and all other delegations the problem and consider actions for the future.

    iii.   Provide time for consultations to discuss possible response strategies.

    iv.   Provide time to gather more information or gather more support from other delegations.

4. Out-competing other texts:

There are a number of reasons why it is in your favour to ensure that there is only one proposal before the conference; naturally, your position and the chances of your proposal being agreed upon are stronger if there is no competition. In the situation where two or more competing proposals are submitted to the conference, there are a number of ways you can get the other party to withdraw their application:

    i.   You could negotiate a merger of the two or more proposals into one that can be supported by all parties involved and is more likely to be passed by the committee.

    ii.   You may be able to persuade them that their proposal is unnecessary because your proposal considers their wishes equally effectively.

    iii.   You may be able to persuade the other party that their proposal does not really advance their objectives.

    iv.   That the other party's text will not be accepted by the conference.

    v.   You may be able to persuade other supporting delegations to press them to withdraw it.

    vi.   If necessary, you may be able to successfully amend their proposal which so changes the proposal that they withdraw it.

5. Producing a consensus:

A consensus can be reached in two ways:

    i.   'Negotiated fix' – in which the solution is worked out by those holding differing views to each other by working together. Delegates exchange proposals and suggest amendments to each other's proposals until they come to an acceptable level of compromise and acceptance. This can take place either in full committee or in a small group meeting which later reports to the full committee.

    ii.   'Constructed fix' – can be produced by the Chairman or an individual delegate (or sometimes a small group of delegates working together). Opposing views do not directly take part in the drafting of the proposal but without careful consultation and representing terms that will be acceptable to all or most delegations, the 'constructed fix' has no chance of being accepted.

Either way, the solution can only emerge if delegations understand what other delegations want. Therefore part of the way to achieve consensus and agreement is to let your objectives be known to other delegations. Constant communication, transparency and active dissemination of your own objectives are essential to coming to a resolution.

Drafting Resolutions

The principal goal of every MUN conference is to adopt an outcome document, usually a resolution, which can be agreed upon by all Member States. Texts at MUNs begin as a draft of the words (a proposal) that will advance a particular aim of the conference agenda. Once these texts are adopted, usually through consensus, they are texts of the conference and carry its authority. Resolutions passed at the Security Council under Chapter VII of the Charter are binding whereas resolutions passed in all other committees are not binding. However it is important not to undermine the powerful commitment that the adoption of a resolution in the General Assembly symbolises, particularly through the pressure of international norms.

Format of a Resolution

Each resolution consists of one long sentence, comprising two kinds of clauses – a set of 'preambulatory clauses' and a set of 'operative clauses'. Preambulatory clauses introduce the topic, provide a background of past action and justify the purpose and content of the resolution; operative clauses then build on the context and background provided by preambulatory clauses and call on Member States to action. Ideally, every operative clause or set of operative clauses should be complemented by a preambulatory clause, but there are no hard and fast rules.

Preambulatory clauses begin with a verb in the present participle, which is in italics and the first letter of which is capitalised. The clause then ends with a comma. Examples: Recognising, Appreciating, Noting with approval.

Operative clauses begin with a verb in the present simple tense, which is in italics and the first letter of which is capitalised. The clause then ends with a semi-colon (except for the very last clause, which ends in a full stop). Examples: Adopts; Calls upon; Requests.

Below is a list of commonly used words for preambulatory and operative clauses:

Preambulatory Clauses	Operative Clauses

Key to successful drafting of resolutions

In the early days of the UN all draft resolutions were put to a vote, now every draft resolution is discussed beforehand in informal consultations where some of the language is sacrificed in a spirit of compromise.

The key to successful drafting of both oral proposals and/or draft resolutions is to consult widely so as to know the concerns of others before you put pen to paper, and then to factor these into your draft so as to recruit sponsors and disarm opponents. When your draft resolution is written, you should again consult widely and be ready to modify it in response to the concerns of other delegations. This process will often ensure the draft's acceptance when it is put to the committee for decision. At the very least, any points of serious disagreement will have been identified and isolated.

Reviewing a Tabled Resolution

Ideally, negotiations and agreements should be concluded as far as possible before tabling a text. However, once a text is tabled, the committee undertakes successive readings, under the Chairperson's guidance, and may propose amendments as each paragraph, sentence or part of a sentence is read out or otherwise considered. If there are no amendments proposed, the passage is considered to be provisionally agreed upon. If there is an amendment proposed, it is discussed, such as through a formal informal, and if agreed upon, incorporated into the text, and the committee moves on. If there is disagreement, the disputed words are put in square brackets and the committee moves on, and so forth till the end.

The square brackets signify that there is, as yet, no agreement on the words within them. Each set of square brackets may enclose a single word or several words. Or the square brackets may include alternative words or phrases, separated by a slash (/). This means that some in the committee prefer one option, while others prefer the alternative.

The second reading may continue immediately, or after a short break for an informal informal, and follows the same process for only the bracketed text. If agreement is reached, the word(s) in question, or different word(s) in their stead, becomes part of the provisionally agreed text. This process continues till the entire draft is agreed upon and can be accepted by consensus.

Terminology

1. To place brackets around text or to bracket text means to mark it as not yet agreed.
2. Getting rid of square brackets means to work towards agreeing on the disputed words or passages.
3. A clean text is one without square brackets, that is to say, the text is acceptable to all who participated in its drafting.

However, there is a strong convention against re-starting discussion on any part of provisionally agreed text, as it can easily lead to prolonged negotiation. Nevertheless, 'all conferences are sovereign'. This means that if delegates agree there is a good reason, a committee may decide to reconsider part of the provisionally agreed text. It is unlikely to agree to such reconsideration unless the proposal is acceptable to all delegates. A sample could look like this:

Tips for MUN simulations

The review of draft resolutions and the consideration of amendments is the most time consuming element of a conference. In addition, it is typically a time during MUN simulations when Rules of Procedure are frequently invoked which further slows down the process of taking action on a draft resolution.

Given the time limitations of a typical Model UN conference, the amount of time needed to take action on agenda items can be significantly reduced by:
• reducing or limiting the number of resolutions that are tabled on a particular agenda item.
• making sure that the sponsor(s) of a draft resolution have consulted with other delegations to make sure it has wide support by other delegations. It is critical for the sponsor(s) of a resolution to know whether their resolution has a chance of success before it is tabled.
• reviewing the text of a resolution line by line. Instead of considering amendments at random, a rigorous organized review can help identify where delegates are in disagreement and allow more time for informal consultations to resolve their differences.

Rules of Procedure

Rules of procedure are utilised by most Model UN conferences to maintain order and decorum by deciding who speaks, on what and when. This is essential as delegates put forth their points of view and interact with other States on lengthy agendas. However, many Model UN simulations have evolved to follow parliamentary rules of procedure which do not accurately mirror the realities of the proceedings that take place at the UN General Assembly. In an effort to bring Model UN procedure closer to the actual functioning of the UN, this guide hopes to highlight the differences in procedure between MUNs and the UN and clearly lay down procedures to follow that are more accurately aligned with realities of UN proceedings.

An international conference is an interaction between States through the medium of the delegates, who act as representatives of States. It is through these conversations, primarily cooperative, that much of the business at the UN progresses. Rules of procedure divide these 'consultations' into two kinds of discussion:

Formal Consultation

During formal proceedings, the rules of procedure are observed under the supervision of the committee Chairperson. Delegates, during this time, are able to make speeches, answer questions, introduce and debate resolution and amendments. The purpose of these rules is to ensure that only one delegate speaks at any given time and to allow the Chairperson to steer the negotiations in a constructive direction.

Informal Consultation

Delegates are in consultation with each other from the moment they arrive at the MUN or UN until they leave. In addition to the order of business, their exchanges may be social or to pursue other objectives. This is the type of consultation that takes place in the form of face-to-face conversations, during which no formal rules of procedure are put into effect.

At MUN simulations in the past, the rules of procedure have figured much more prominently in the proceedings than they do at the UN. Part of the reason for this is due to the more rigid parliamentary rules of procedure employed at MUNs. Another reason for this is that the majority of the proceedings of an MUN – motion, debate, negotiation, amendment and resolution – take place during formal consultation, highlighting the need for rules of procedure and the need to introduce motions. On the other hand, the principal mode of communication between delegates at the UN is through face-to-face informal consultations; therefore the negotiation process does not rely heavily on formal proceedings. Formal processes at the UN are mainly used to provide a context for informal consultations between delegations and to formalise agreements previously reached during these.

Flow of Debate: Traditional MUN Model

ROLL CALL
The Chairperson will announce each country's name. After a delegate hears their country called, they should answer either "present" or "present and voting"

SETTING THE AGENDA
The first order of business for the committee shall be the consideration of the agenda. The only motion in order at this time will be in the form of "The nation of [country name] moves that [topic area x] be placed first on the agenda". The motion requires a second and is debatable. A provisional speakers list shall be established with two people speaking for and two people speaking against the motion; after the provisional speakers list is exhausted, the committee shall move into an immediate vote. A simple majority is required for the motion to pass.

A motion to proceed to the second topic area is in order only after the committee has voted on a resolution regarding the first topic area or tabled the topic.

DEBATE

SPEAKERS LIST (FORMAL DEBATE)

The Chairperson will ask all of those delegates who would like to make a speech and to be on the speakers list to raise their placards. The Chairperson will then choose delegates to be placed on the speakers list. After a country has spoken, they may be added on the speakers list again by sending a note to the Chairperson saying: "the delegation of (country name) would like to be added to the speakers list".

Speaking time is set through a motion from a delegate. If no motions are made, the default time is 90 seconds. When the committee is in formal debate all rules of procedure are enforced.

CAUCUS

Moderated Caucus
A moderated caucus is a mixture of both formal and informal debate. When a motion for a moderated caucus is passed, the Chair calls upon delegates as they raise their placards to address the committee for a specific amount of time.

Unmoderated Caucus
An un-moderated caucus is a temporary recess. Rules of procedure are suspended during caucusing. During this time delegates can meet informally with each other and the committee staff to discuss draft resolutions and other issues.

Working Papers and Draft Resolutions
Delegations work together to create resolutions. In addition, delegates may present amendments to these documents, which are changes to draft resolutions.

END OF LIST
Once the speakers list has been exhausted, the committee will automatically move to immediate voting procedures.

CLOSURE OF DEBATE
Once a delegate feels that they have made their country's position clear and that there are enough draft resolutions on the floor, he or she may make a motion to proceed into voting procedure by moving for the closure of debate.

VOTING PROCEDURES
Once a motion to close debate has been approved, the committee moves into voting procedures. Amendments are voted upon first, then resolutions. Once all of the resolutions are voted upon, the committee can move to the next topic

Flow of Debate: UN General Assembly Model

QUORUM

The quorum, or number of member states who need to be present for the meeting to open is one-third in the Plenary and one-fourth in the Main Committee. The Chairperson will announce each country's name, after a delegate hears their country called, they should answer "present".

THE AGENDA

The provisional agenda shall be drawn up by the Secretary-General and communicated to all delegations prior to the start of the conference. The provisional agenda of the conference will include relevant documents and reports as well as the order in which the issues will be considered at the conference. The second topic area is considered only after the committee has dealt with a resolution regarding the first topic area or tabled the topic.

INFORMAL CONSULTATIONS:

Although 'caucus' types of meeting do occur, this parliamentary terminology is not used at the UN.

Formal Informal

When a motion to suspend the meeting for a formal informal is passed, the Chair calls upon delegates as they raise their placards to address the committee for a specific amount of time.

FORMAL CONSULTATIONS

The Speaker's List may be drawn up based on delegates' messages from delegates in advance of the conference. Alternatively, the Chairperson will ask all of those delegates who would like to make a speech and to be on the speakers list to raise their placards. The Chairperson will then choose delegates to be placed on the speakers list. After a country has spoken, they may be added on the speakers list again by sending a note to the Chairperson saying: "the delegation of (country name) would like to be added to the speakers list". There are no yields.

If no motions are made, the default time will be mentioned in the Programme of Work, usually set at 90 seconds. When the committee is in formal debate all rules of procedure are enforced.

Informal Informal

An informal informal is a temporary recess during which rules of procedure are suspended for negotiation. Delegates can meet informally with each other and the committee staff to discuss the issue and merge resolutions. These take up a majority of committee time.

Draft Resolutions

Delegates divide into regional or political blocs to agree on resolution language within their group. Each group merges with another, until one resolution is on the floor.

END OF SPEAKERS' LIST

With the permission of the representatives present, the President/Chairperson may declare the list closed. The President/Chairperson may however accord the right of reply to any member if a speech delivered after the closing of the list makes this desirable.

CLOSURE OF DEBATE

Once regional and political groupings have merged their texts into one acceptable by the whole committee, delegates may move for closure of debate to adopt the resolution by consensus. If the committee fails to reach consensus, then voting may occur.

ADOPTION BY CONSENSUS

The Chair simply states that the resolution has been adopted by consensus, and forwards the resolution to the Plenary. In the case that consensus cannot be achieved, debate can either be tabled (No-Action) or closed (Voting). Amendments are voted upon first, then resolutions. Once the resolution is voted upon, the committee can move to the next topic on the agenda.

Rules of Procedure

I.   OPENING THE DEBATE

1. Setting The Agenda:

Rule 1: The provisional agenda for the conference shall be drawn up by the Secretary-General and communicated to all delegations at least two months before the start of the conference.

Rule 2: The provisional agenda of the conference shall include:
   a) Reports on the themes selected for each conference; and,
   b) All items which the Secretary-General deems necessary to put before the delegations;
   c) The order in which issues will be considered in the meeting.

Rule 3: At each conference, the provisional agenda shall be submitted to the meeting for approval during the opening session.

2. Minute of silent prayer or meditation:

Rule 4: Immediately after the opening of the first meeting and preceding the closing of the final meeting, the President/Chairperson shall invite the representatives to observe one minute of silent prayer or meditation.

II. CONDUCT OF BUSINESS

3. Speeches:

Rule 5: No representative may address the meeting without having previously obtained permission of the President/Chairperson. The President/Chairperson shall call upon speakers in the order in which they signify their desire to speak after adding them to the Speaker's List. The President/Chairperson may call out a speaker if his or her remarks are not relevant to the subject under discussion.

4. Time Limit on Speeches:

Rule 6: The meeting may limit the time to be allowed to each speaker and the number of times each representative may speak on any question. Before a decision is taken, two representatives may speak in favour of, and two against a proposal to set a time limit which will then be put to vote. When the debate is limited and a representative

UN Information Centre
for India and Bhutan

exceeds his or her allotted time, the President/Chairperson shall call the speaker to order without delay.

5. Points of Order:

Rule 7: During the discussion of any matter, a representative may raise a 'point of order' if the delegate believes that the President/Chairperson is not following the Rules of Procedure or not being sufficiently active in ensuring that other representatives do so. The point of order shall be immediately ruled on by the President/Chairperson in accordance with the rules of procedure. If a delegate feels that the ruling of the President/Chairperson is incorrect, they may appeal against the ruling. The appeal is put to a vote and the decision of the President/Chairperson could be overruled by a majority of the members present and voting.

  ☐ There is a widely used convention for signaling to the President/Chairman that the reason that the delegate is asking for the floor is to raise a 'point of order' rather than simply to be put on the Speaker's List, the delegate makes a 'T' with their hand and placard.

6. Closing of List of Speakers; Right to Reply:

Rule 8: During the course of the debate, the President/Chairperson may announce the list of speakers and, with the permission of the representatives present, declare the list closed. The president/Chairperson may however accord the right of reply to any member if a speech delivered after the closing of the list makes this desirable. Right of reply is not used under any other circumstances.

III. MOTIONS

7. Suspension of Meeting:

Rule 9: The meeting may be suspended for a limited amount of time upon request by a representative or the President/Chairperson. Such matters will not be debated but will immediately be put to a vote. A suspended meeting is resumed on the same day. This motion is used to break for informal consultations, and for lunch and tea breaks.

8. Adjournment of Meeting:

Rule 10: During the discussion of any matter, a representative may motion for the adjournment of the meeting. Such motions will not be debated but immediately put to a vote. Any continued consideration of an item on the agenda will take place at another meeting on another day. This motion can be used at the end of the day.

9. Adjournment of Debate:

Rule 11: During the discussion of any matter, a representative may propose the motion to adjourn the debate on the item under discussion. In addition to the proposer of the motion, two representatives may speak for the motion and two representatives may speak against, after which the proposal will be put to a vote. Adjournment of debate ends parts or all of the agenda item being discussed during the conference. This can be used to block action on specific draft resolution and is known as a 'no-action motion'.

10. Closure of Debate:

Rule 12: A representative may at any time motion for the closure of debate on the item under discussion, whether or not the representative has signified their wish to speak. A representative can motion for this after they feel that sufficient progress has been made on draft resolutions, and they are ready to be adopted by consensus, or to be forced to a vote. Permission to speak on the closure of the debate shall be accorded only to two speakers opposing the closure, after which the motion shall be immediately put to vote. If the meeting votes in favour of this motion, the President/Chairperson shall declare the closure of the debate.

11. Order of Procedural Motions:

Rule 13: Subject to Rule 8, the motions indicated below shall have precedence in the following order over all the other procedures or motions in the meeting:
    a) To suspend the meeting;
    b) To adjourn the meeting;
    c) To adjourn debate on the item under discussion;
    d) To close debate on the item under discussion.

IV.   DRAFT RESOLUTIONS

12. Tabling Draft Resolution:

Rule 14: Any member state may submit a draft resolution to the Secretary for which no minimum percentage of support is required. However since resolutions are aimed to be adopted by consensus, it is advised that representatives build multilateral support before tabling draft resolutions.

UN Information Centre
for India and Bhutan

13. Proposals and Amendments:

Rule 15: Proposals and amendments on a tabled draft resolution/decisions shall be submitted are either formally submitted in writing to Secretary, issued as 'L-documents' or proposed orally from the floor, if no member objects.

Rule 16: When an amendment is moved to a proposal, the amendment shall be voted on first. When two or more amendments are moved to a proposal, the committee shall first vote on the amendment furthest removed in substance from the original proposal and then on the amendment next furthest removed therefrom, and so on until all the amendments have been put to the vote. Where, however, the adoption of one amendment necessarily implies the rejection of another amendment, the latter amendment shall not be put to the vote. If one or more amendments are adopted, the amended proposal shall then be considered or voted upon. A motion is considered an amendment to a proposal if it merely adds to, deletes from or revises part of the proposal.

Rule 17: A member can request division of proposals, i.e. a separate vote on paragraphs or parts of the draft resolution or amendment before the adoption of the whole text. This applies to parts of a paragraph, an entire paragraph or several paragraphs. If the request is challenged, there will be a vote to decide whether the proposal can be divided such that the paragraph(s) can be voted on separately to the rest of the draft resolution. After two delegates each have spoken for and against the request, there will be a vote based on simple majority. If by majority, the request is passed, immediately after the voting on the paragraph, the entire draft resolution will be considered. If all operative parts of the proposal or of the amendment have been rejected, the proposal or the amendment shall be considered to have been rejected as a whole.

14. Voting on draft resolution:

Rule 18: It is assumed that draft resolutions will be adopted by consensus and therefore shall not require voting. However, in the event that the draft resolution cannot be accepted by consensus, the meeting will go into a vote.

Rule 19: If all operative paragraphs of a draft resolution are rejected, the draft resolution will be considered rejected as a whole.

V. VOTING

15. Voting Rights:

Rule 19: Each member state of the meeting shall have one vote.

16. Majority Required:

Rule 20: Decisions of the General Assembly meeting shall be made by a simple majority of the members present and voting, except on important questions including recommendations with respect to the maintenance of international peace and security, the suspension of the rights and privileges of membership, the expulsion of Members, and budgetary questions. This applies to both draft resolutions and amendments.

17. Method of voting:

Rule 22: The meeting shall normally vote by a show of hands or by standing but any representative may request a roll-call vote. The roll-call will be taken in alphabetical order, and when called, the representative shall answer "yes", "no" or "abstention".

18. Conduct during voting:

Rule 23: After the President/Chairperson has announced the beginning of voting, no delegate shall interrupt the voting unless on a point of order in connection with the actual voting procedure. The President/Chairperson may permit members to explain their vote either before or after the voting. The time given for these explanations may be limited by the President/Chairperson. The President/Chairperson shall not permit the proposer of an amendment to explain his vote on his own proposal or amendment.

19. Equally divided votes:

Rule 24: If a vote is equally divided on any matter, the President/Chairman shall decide if a second vote shall be taken. If the second vote also results in an equally divided situation, the proposal shall be regarded as rejected.
